TROUBLE WITH A LARGE DOG.

Canine Catcher Arouses Ire of Spectators by Alleged Abuse of Animal Captured on Donner avenue.

A large crowd was attracted about 10 o'clock this forenoon on Donner avenue, just below Fifth, when the dog catcher man attempted to land a large animal which was found on the street without the proper credentials

Mr. Dog Catcher jumped from his wagon, cast his net, but before he got through with his job he imagined he was in the jungle of Africa and had captured an elephant of huge proportions instead of—just a common, everyday, ugly dog. The animal fought and his yelps brought people for three squares.

A rope was brought into play and the dog almost strangled before he was landed in the wagon and by standers were indignant, threatening to report to the humane agent—cruelty to animals.

The ordinance, they think, while providing for the arrest of all stray dogs, does not permit of undue cruelty or abuse, which many assert was brought forth in the case. It is not known to whom this dog belongs, and as it had a habit of running and barking at passing teams, etc., many were glad to see the animal captured, but they did not like to see it abused.

Dog owners must now look out for if their favorite is found out without license and chain or muzzle, it will be arrested and taken to the pound, and perhaps killed

Wanner Land Company will have 20 salesmen on their plan at Eldora, at their opening sale, Saturday and Monday, June 16 & 18th. Buyers are taking advantage of the 20% discount offered for cash on all lots, sold on or before June 18th. If you are in shape to take advantage of this great offer it will pay you better than 4% you get for your saving in the banks. Besides the increase in value of your investment of at least 25 to 50% in one year.

OH! WHAT A NERVE.

According to the Bedford Gazette, it's no wonder the price of coal is so high. "There is a continual rake-off from the time it's mined till the consumer get's it." Not satisfied the poor railroads are also mentioned, the officials being blamed for bleeding the operators and the operators being accused of bleeding the consumers in turn. Now what do you think of that, and they don't even mention apology. Yea verily the time has come when even the mighty powers are compelled to take their bumps.

THAT Indiana county young man who came near losing his life recently by being stabbed through the lung with a hat pin while trying to separate a number of girls who were engaging in a pitched battle over the outcome of a ball game will probably have enough sense in future to let the women have their way. It is more than likely the poor girl who did the sticking, thought in the excitement it was the umpire she had soaked.

TODAY the viewers appointed by the court will decide the benefits and damages to properties caused by the opening of the street to the river. Let the proper ones strike while the iron is hot by filing the bonds and going ahead with the work. Nothing can be gained by delay.

AND those poor Jeannette teachers are stuck up. Probably this comes from the civic pride due to the knowledge that there's no "revolting packing houses" there.

No provision has been made for the disposition of the dog catcher when the local supply runs out. Please sir, can't he then start on Wireton dogs?

The Great Nerve Tonic

Read this letter

Galien, Mich.

Gentlemen: I bought three bottles of your medicine from my druggist. The medicine rendered me very good service, but I am sorry to say that the druggists here are all sold out of your medicine. I should have bought six bottles instead of three. I will gladly take six bottles of the Nervine and Blood Tonic, and request that you write me, if you are able to read this, for I am rather old to write. I have suffered six years from NERVOUS TROUBLE, caused by a fall, and my whole body remained in a tremble, but no pain. Every doctor I consulted failed to help me, and I was compelled to give up all housework. Then I read your advertisement and bought your medicine, and almost immediately after commencing its use I was a new woman. I hope you will write me at once, and tell me how much money I must send, as I am anxious to get to using your medicine again soon. With most hearty regards, I remain,

MRS. MARIE A. PRENKERT.

When John Walker was left a widower, although he was in the prime of manhood, with a comfortable income and good habits, it was universally predicted that he could never win a second wife.

For what manner of woman—that is, of the type fastidious John Walker would fancy—could contemplate the prospect of stepmothering seven daughters ranging in age from pert thirteen to precocious four?

If the children had been boys, John Walker's prospects would have been more favorable, for a squad of boys can be turned afield, but seven girls to hear and heed until they should come to an age when they would with their lords depart!

John Walker was domestic, and after two years of widowerhood he began to yearn for a goddess of his hearth and home. The affairs of his household had not been administered so badly since his wife died. The cook was capable and honest and had been reigning over the kitchen for eight years. The seamstress, who had always spent a month each spring and autumn "sewing up" for the young Walkers, continued her visits, with the added responsibility of selecting and purchasing material.

The eldest girl, Madge, was promising to be quite a practical little housekeeper, but John Walker knew that a wise feminine hand and heart were essential to the guidance of his active, romping, unruly troop of youngsters.

He began to call assiduously upon Cecilia Rayne, a young woman renowned for her intellect, practicality and excellent judgment. She accepted his attentions, though reservedly, and with a general air of careful consideration and "weighing in the balance."

His intentions were regarded as unmistakable when he invited her, with her mother, to visit his home and drink tea one afternoon. The children on this fateful day had never been so noisy or unattractive. Even Madge was boisterous and untidy.

John Walker did not know that it was malice aforethought on the part of his offspring. Madge was precocious and acute eared. She had heard it said that John Walker would marry just as soon as he could find any one to have him. She had sized up Miss Rayne as a home ruler, and in the mother of Miss Rayne she scented a natural enemy.

So she instigated and encouraged rebellion in her many sisters, and their deportment carried the day. John Walker escorted his guests to their home and returned with the firm intention of administering unto his own something stronger than rebuke.

He found his flock white robed and sweet voiced, awaiting with uplifted mouths his good night caress, and he could not bring himself to mar their slumbers by so much as a word.

"If she only could have seen them as they are now!" he thought, with a regretful sigh.

Madge's busy little brain worked overtime that night on the solution of the stepmother problem. A day or two after the eventful visit of Miss Cecilia Rayne, as John Walker was passing a little park, he met two or three kindergarten teachers walking with their young charges. He gave them but a casual glance, when his attention was attracted by a delighted cry of "Papa!"

The littlest and last child in the procession let go of the hand of the young girl with whom she was walking and rushed up to him.

"Why, Tot," he said, taking her up in his arms.

Then he looked hesitatingly at the young teacher, who was walking on slowly.

"You must be Mr. Walker," she said naively. "I am Tot's kindergarten teacher."

"Are you?" he asked interestedly. "I didn't know that Tot attended a kindergarten."

"Didn't you?" she asked anxiously. "Madge brought her to school yesterday and entered her as a pupil. I supposed it was your wish."

"Of course it is," he replied promptly, "only I hadn't thought of it before. I am glad Madge is so wise."

"I've learned lots, papa. I'm going to prick you a card," assured Tot.

"Thank you, darling. Where is your school, Miss"—

"Worden," she said, supplying the name. "The school is on the corner of Wood and Third streets, three blocks below. Are you fond of children, Mr. Walker?" she asked, looking up at the princess enthroned on his shoulder.

"Naturally," he said, with a whimsical smile.

She flushed and laughed a little.

"Come and visit our school some time, then."

"I will walk there with you now," he responded promptly, setting Tot down on the sidewalk.

The child instantly appropriated a hand of each guardian and skipped along between them.

"Who takes her to and from school?" he asked, remembering the automobiles and trolley cars.

"Madge has so far."

"Madge said you could stop for me noons on your way home to luncheon," said the little girl.

"Why, yes, so I can. How did Madge know of your school, Miss Worden?"

"Oh, Madge and I are old friends. I give music lessons afternoons, and her inseparable companion, Grace Landon, is one of my pupils."

"I wish you would give Madge lessons too. Her teacher left the city some time ago, and I have neglected to have her start again."

"I should be glad to teach her," said the girl simply.

"Very well. You may commence tomorrow, if agreeable, and give her two lessons a week."

"She's a sweet little girl," thought John Walker as he pursued his way from the kindergarten. "She must be Tom Worden's daughter. Poor fellow! His failure took all he had. She's a trump to take hold and help in this way."

The first day that John called for Tot he so cordially seconded the child's invitation to her teacher to come home with them to luncheon that she was forced to comply.

Madge's music hour was from 5:30 to 6, and she would not practice properly unless her teacher would consent to stay to dinner. The children all claimed her as a kindred spirit and called her "Bess," for which they were sternly and ineffectually reprimanded by their parent, who finally followed their example and called her by that name himself.

In the month of July the Walkers went to their summer cottage on a lake some twenty miles from the city.

"You need a vacation more than any one," said John Walker abruptly to Bess one day. "You must go with us."

"Thank you very much," said the girl gratefully. "It's kind in you to ask me, but of course I can't accept."

"Why not?" he demanded. "Your father is going west on an extended business trip, and he won't need you."

The girl blushed, hesitated and then said frankly:

"Why, you see, of course, it would really be all right, but then you know people would talk—they wouldn't approve."

She began to flounder in her explanation, and John suddenly comprehended.

"I see," he laughed, nodding. "But you see you have come to seem to me like one of my own—my eighth girl. I call you—but I suppose you are grown up enough for a chaperon."

"I am twenty years old," she said with dignity.

"Indeed! A great age. Well, I have a second cousin, a meek, elderly widow, whom the children rule firmly. I presume she would like a month or so at the cottage."

So it was finally arranged.

From that time on John Walker suddenly regarded his children's teacher in a new light.

"I wonder if a beautiful young girl like Bess could come to care for an old duffer like me," he pondered. "I had supposed that she considered me an old man!"

A thrill stirred within him as he looked up at the fair young face gazing happily over the waters of the lake on the first night of their arrival.

"Bess!" he said suddenly.

But the children had also called "Bess," and she was away for a romp on the beach.

"She is only a child, after all," he thought, with a sigh.

In the Walker boathouse was a canoe which the children were forbidden to use, but Bess one Sunday morning ventured forth alone in it. She managed it very skillfully, but on her return a sudden wind came up and made the lake choppy. She had all she could do to keep her little craft right side up.

John Walker, coming out on the veranda of the cottage, saw her danger and rushed to the boathouse, intending to row out after her. Another emotion besides anxiety surged within him, and he knew now that he loved this playmate of his children.

She was making great progress with her tiny canoe, and as he rowed out from the boathouse she was landing at the pier.

It was a very merry, winsome face, alight with the excitement and danger, that was lifted to his.

In the reaction from his fright he was beginning to censure her when he was interrupted by Madge, who had appeared upon the scene and who instantly resented her father's lecture.

"You shall not scold her!" she cried hotly. "I wanted her for our stepmother, but I'll give her up if you aren't going to be nice to her."

Bess turned red and pale by turns.

"I'll race you to the house, Madge," she cried, and they were away.

"Bess," said John softly when he had succeeded in getting an interview, "as I said, I had thought of you as my eighth girl. I don't want to think of you as a stepmother, but I do want you to be my wife and a companion to the girls because I love you. Will you try and care for me?"

The verdict of the world was that John Walker had eight girls now and needed a woman in his house more than ever.

Complete Letter Writers.

One of the earliest of these "guides," dated 1615, was styled "A President For Young Pennen." It was advertised as full of variety, delight and pleasure. The former quality it undoubtedly possessed, as will be seen from the following headings: There is "A letter from a friend to a fantastical, conceited madcap." "A byting letter to a clamorous gentlewoman," with a "byting" answer to the same, which must have relieved the feelings of the writer; also a "Melancholy, discontentive letter upon the frowne of a kinsman," and, as a variation, "A kind of quarrelsome letter upon a frowne of a friend."

A letter to an "unkle to borrow a horse," strikes one as being of more practical value than all the rest put together and infinitely to be preferred as a model to the epistle of "Miss Molly Smith to her cousin, giving her an account of a very remarkable instance of envy in one of her acquaintance who lived in the city of York." How a distracted scribe was to get help or comfort from Miss Molly Smith is more than we are prepared to say.—London Graphic.

The pain in my back was so bad that I could not sleep at night. I could not ride a horse and sometimes was unable even to ride in a car. My condition was critical when I sent for Doan's Kidney Pills. I used three boxes and they cured me. Now I can go anywhere and do as much as anybody. I sleep well and feel no discomfort at all."

SWARMS OF LOCUSTS.

Pests Appear in Central Part of Pennsylvania, the First Since 1889.

Farmers of the northern and central parts of Pennsylvania are preparing to fight an army of millions of locusts which have descended on fields and orchards and threaten to destroy crops and fruits trees.

The pests has made its reappearance within the past two days and already hundreds of trees show evidence of the ravages that have been made.

The sections in part so far as have been heard from are Clinton county, Lancashire county, Centre county and the country around Lock Haven, Bloomsburg, Lewisburg, Pottsville and Bald Eagle Mountains.

Farmers dread the sting of locusts, which is said to often cause the death of the person attacked. Two men fought a swarm of the insects near Pottsville and were stung so seriously by either locusts or snakes that their lives are despaired of. The attending physician thinks there is a probability that while they were fighting the locusts the men may have been bitten by rattlesnakes.

Miners are Assessed.

The national executive committee of the United Mine Workers of America closed a two weeks' meeting at Indianapolis yesterday. A per capita assessment of 50c per week on the working members of the organization was ordered. It is estimated this will bring in a revenue of $150,000 each year.

It is reported that millions of locusts are ravaging the northern and central parts of the state, where it is feared the crops and fruit trees will be destroyed.

A serious quarrel took place this morning between two of our prominent citizens, resulting from their different opinions as to the cause of an extremely noticeable odor which passed over town last evening. One said it came from the Chicago Packing houses, while the other favored the belief that it arose from the "remains" of that bridge to Donora issue. We hardly think they came to blows but when our representative left the scene they were still heatedly arguing.

Monday night's robbery again forcibly demonstrates to Webster citizens the need of drastic measures to rid our town of the band of lawless thugs who have for quite a long time been carrying on, practically unmolested their depredations They not only make robbery their specialty, but seem to take especial delight in acts of an inhuman and blood thirsty nature. Whether the same gang is guilty of these numerous acts or not, something should be done and that promptly to stop the practice.
